

SAA at 851. There was a path for Erdemir to avail itself to preserve its rights to obtain a reexamination of the Commission's original determination in light of the subsequent successful appeal of Commerce's final original determination that resulted in a de minimis dumping margin for Colakoglu and exclusion of imports from Colakoglu from the scope of Commerce's final affirmative antidumping duty determination. The potential impact on Erdemir at the time that Erdemir and Colakoglu appealed Commerce's final antidumping duty determination was known to Erdemir at that time, and in fact, Erdemir joined Colakoglu in appealing Commerce's original determination. Erdemir did not appeal the Commission's final affirmative material injury determination which would have provided it with the opportunity to preserve its rights for further reconsideration of the merits based on the outcome of Commerce's appeal. Accord Borlem S.A. Empreendimento Industriais v. United States, 913 F.2d 933, 939 (Fed. Cir. 1990); *LG Electronics, Inc. v. The interests of the finality of the agency's decision are paramount under the circumstances presented and, absent extraordinary circumstances, we decline the request to revisit the final original determination.
