

years after the subject firm's shift of production of garments to Mexico) supports the Department's findings that the subject workers' employment with the subject firm was not dependent upon domestic production and that the subject firm's shift of garment production to Mexico was not a factor in the subject workers' separations. Conclusion

After review of the application and investigative findings, I conclude that there has been no error or misinterpretation of the law or of the facts which would justify reconsideration of the Department of Labor's prior decision. Accordingly, the application is denied.
